

Relationship Connection Blueprint for Don & Ellie

We are so glad that you've chosen create greater understanding and connection in your relationship!

We know that the information contained in this report will provide you with the insights and tips that will help you to strengthen your relationship and creating lasting connection and appreciation for each other!

This blueprint is organized into five sections:

Perceptual Style Analysis – includes key characteristics of each of your Perceptual Styles (determined by your Perceptual Style Assessments) and observations about how your Perceptual Style influence your interactions with each other. This information will provide you with context on the differences between you based on how you make meaning of the world around you and take action.

Preference for Interaction Analysis – highlights your PFI results (determined by your Recognized Strength Profile assessments) and provides comparison points of what the differences and similarities mean to how you connect and interact with each other.

Relationship Strengths – Details regarding the natural strengths that each of you bring to the relationship and how those strengths compliment or overlap each other.

Relationship Challenges – because of your Perceptual Styles, your natural strengths, and your Preferences for Interaction, you'll also have some challenges in your relationship. In this section we identify the triggers for misunderstandings that you need to be aware of and provide tips and suggestions on mitigation techniques.

Interaction Insights – in this final section we provide you with point-of-view perspectives on how each of your Perceptual Styles see the other style, how you approach communication, change, and conflict. This is a great reference section. It's one thing to intellectually understand that the people you care about see things differently than you do, it's another thing to "step in to their shoes" for a brief moment and gain greater understanding of just what those differences mean to each of you. Because you are each more than just a Perceptual Style, you may or may not have personally experienced all of the differences presented. The most important thing to remember is that the differences are real, but neither style is right or wrong. They both are valid, they are just different.
